

Text:

Henry is a calm and quiet boy who loves reading. Every week, while his friends play together in the playground, he sits on a bench, engrossed in an interesting new book.

One day, his best friend, Janet, notices that he is gaining weight. Concerned for his health, she decides to talk to him.

"Henry, I want to discuss something important with you, but please don't take it the wrong way," Janet says gently.

"Why would I misunderstand you? We're close friends. Feel free to say whatever you want," Henry replies.

"I've noticed that you've become less active and are gaining weight. You should take better care of your health by eating healthy food and doing physical activities," Janet advises.

Henry reflects for a moment and nods. "You're right. I've been eating too many sweets and junk food. I need to change my habits. Thank you for your concern, Janet. I'll try to lead a healthier lifestyle."
